

The Haifa Center for German and European Studies
The School of History

Bucerius Institute for Research of Contemporary German History and Society
Guest Lecture

When did Marx think capitalism would fall?

Prof. Gareth Stedman Jones

Professor of the History of Ideas at Queen Mary University of London
Director of the Centre for History and Economics, Cambridge Fellow of Kings College, Cambridge University

From the end of the nineteenth century, Marxists held that the capitalist mode of production would necessarily end in collapse. This was certainly the position of Engels and of the subsequent twentieth century Marxist tradition. But was this Marx's own position? There is no simple answer to this question, since Marx's position changed over time. I shall argue that it is possible to distinguish three distinct phases in Marx's picture of what capital was and how it might end. 1) the period ending with the revolutions of 1848. 2) The period ending around 1859. 3) The period 1864-1869. I shall examine each of these phases, together with Engels' subsequent editing of the unpublished manuscript of Capital in order to explain how the standard assumption arose.

Thursday, December 6, 2018

12:00 – 14:00

Library Auditorium Room 146, University of Haifa

The discussion will be held in English and will be open to the public

Haifa Center for German and European Studies • hcgges@univ.haifa.ac.il