

TEL AVIV UNIVERSITY

Reading Medieval and Renaissance English Literature

13 MARCH, 2013

A national one day conference for graduates and scholars working in the field of medieval or early modern English studies in Israel.

Hosted by the Department of English and American Studies
Tel Aviv University

Fellow students and scholars in medieval and early modern English studies in Israel - you are not alone! As the field continues to grow, with new graduate students choosing to do their research in this field in Israel every year, there is much need for a national symposium which will allow all those working in the field, at all levels, to share ideas, discuss their work, and take part in further collaborative initiatives. It is especially envisioned that the mixed participation of graduate students and more experienced scholars will allow for a more fruitful interaction in the spirit of collegial and constructive critical engagement.

The aim is then to further use this gathering, the first of many we hope, to set up an online national forum which allow all those working in the field in Israel to communicate, pool resources and share ideas on a more regular basis.

We invite papers from graduates either at the MA or PHD thesis level and scholars working in the field of medieval and/or early modern English literary studies to submit titles and abstracts of 200-300 words on any topic relating to their research for a 20 minute paper. Panels will be arranged according to related topics, with a preference for mixed graduate and senior speakers.

Each panel will include 60 minutes of papers followed by 20 minutes of discussion.

Deadline for submission of abstracts: 6 January, 2013.

Please send abstracts as Word attachment to: tau.earlymodern@gmail.com

For further details please contact:

Noam Reisner, reisner@post.tau.ac.il

Yafit Shachar, yafitan@post.tau.ac.il

